Peter Logue, Multimedia/Film

“I grew up in Southwest Harbor and I feel that all of my work is in some way linked to the sense of place and community that comes with living on an island,” writes filmmaker Peter Logue. A graduate of the University of Connecticut, Peter’s first love is writing and, while his early films have been primarily documentaries, he aspires to writing and directing his own narrative feature films. His documentary shorts include “Frank & Ada,” the story of octagenarian Mainers renewing their high school romance; and “Outrunning Parkinson’s,” about a former elite runner who found that racing helps to alleviate his symptoms. Filmmaker Peter Logue fell back in love with and returned to his home state after a screening tour for his first documentary, “The Search for the White Rose.” ►
